X, Y, A	Selects receiver as designated receiver for a pass.
L	Throws a lob pass. Lobbed balls are the easiest to catch.

B	Cancels passing. The Quarterback becomes a ball carrier.

After the hike-Ball Carrier

Control Pad	Moves the ball carrier.
X	Dive. The ball carrier dives in the direction he is facing. Good for grabbing extra yardage.

L, R	Changes selected player to the player to the left/right.
B	Calls an audible.

After the hike

Control Pad	Moves the selected player.

CONTROL CONT.

KICKING

Kicking controls are used for field goals, punts, and kick offs. When the kicking screen comes up check out the wind conditions so you can adjust your kick.

- The Power bar moves up and down. Press the B button to stop the Power Bar at the desired power level. The higher the bar, the harder the kick.

- The offense can only pick plays in their chosen formation. The defense can pick any play.
- Press the button of the play you wish to run. Play will begin.
- Press the B button to exit and not call an audible.

CALLING PLAYS

Play book

- Press the Control Pad to scroll through the FORMATIONS in your play book.
- Choose a formation by pressing the button (Y,X ,or A) that corresponds the formation you wish to pick.
- Each formation has a unique set of plays. After choosing a formation the plays will appear in your playbook. Press the Control Pad to scroll through the plays.
- Enter a play by pressing the Y, X, or A button.
- After selecting a play the play book will slide out of view.

PENALTIES

Kick out of bounds – If a kickoff is kicked out of bounds without being touched by either team the receiving team has the option of taking the ball where it went out of bounds or 30 yards from where it was kicked.

Delay of Game – If the offense doesn't hike the ball before the 45 second play clock expires they receive a 5 yard penalty. Over two consecutive delays result in an unsportsman-like conduct penalty.

Unsportsman-Like Conduct – Tackling a player before the ball is hiked is unsportsman-like and carries a 15 yard penalty. The offense also receives a first down.

Personal Foul – Tackling a player not carrying the ball after the ball is hiked is a personal foul. Personal fouls have a 15 yard penalty and a first down for the offense.

Off-sides – This is called when a defensive player is on the offensive side of the line of scrimmage when the ball is hiked or if a defensive player touches an offensive player before the hike. There is a 5 yard penalty for being off-sides.

Pass Interference – Tackling a receiver before they catch the ball is pass interference. If the offense accepts the penalty they receive a first down at the spot where the interference occurred.

Offensive Holding – This occurs when an offensive player grabs or holds a pass rusher. This penalty results in a 10 yard penalty. Penalties that would move the ball more than half the distance to the goal line will move the ball to half the distance to the goal line.

INJURIES

A couple of players may get injured during the course of the game. The computer will make automatic substitutions for those that go out.

OFFENSE – GOAL LINE FORMATION PLAYS

COUNTER

On this inside running play from the Goal Line formation, the tailback takes the hand-off and blasts through the area between the left tackle and left guard behind the lead blocking of the fullback.

The left tackle and tight end must drive the weak side defensive end and linebacker off the line, but it is the blocks of the left guard and the fullback against the weak side defensive tackle and the middle linebacker that can really spring the play. The center and right guard co-op block the strong side defensive tackle; then the center must slide off this co-op block to block the pursuing strong side linebacker.

LOCOMOTIVE

The tailback receives a hand-off from the quarterback and runs to the right.

COUNTER

This play utilizes two important concepts: misdirection running and trap blocking. The play looks at first like a run to the weak side, with the center and left tackle blocking in that direction. The right guard steps back, giving the impression he is pulling. The fullback adds to the deception by pretending to lead block toward the left tackle. As the strong side defensive tackle is lured by the dropback steps of the right guard, the left guard pulls, cuts across the line, and trap blocks him. This opens a hole to the right of the center for the halfback to run through. The right tackle will block the middle linebacker away from the running hole.

The sweep is run to the outside (left), between the tight end and the sideline. On this play, the halfback gets lead blocking help from the fullback and two pulling guards. Offensive blockers work to clear the outside lane for the sweeping ball carrier. While the flanker slants to block the strong safety, the right guard pulls out and around to block the strong side linebacker and the left guard pulls to block the middle linebacker. The fullback is available to lead block against the strong side cornerback. On this play, the center, the right tackle, and tight end block back toward the weak side.

PITCH LEFT

On this play, the tailback comes out of a Goal Line formation, takes the pitch-out from the quarterback, and sweeps around the outside (to the left) behind the leading fullback. The pitch allows the tailback to gain speed and momentum as he tries to turn the corner and get downfield.

The crucial offensive blocks are the hook blocks by the left tackle and tight end against the weak side defensive tackle and end, and the block by the pulling left guard against the weak side linebacker. The left guard pulls and cuts inside to block the middle linebacker. The flanker blocks the strong safety while the lead blocking fullback takes on the strong side cornerback.

OFF TACKLE (GOAL LINE)

On this "power play" through the strong side off tackle hole, the fullback carries the ball. He gets blocking help from a leading halfback, a double-team block, and pulling guard.

The right tackle and tight end double-team the strong side defensive end, as in the off tackle (strong side) play, but the left guard pulls and comes around the strong side to block the middle linebacker. The strong side linebacker is blocked by the halfback. (If the strong side linebacker takes on the left guard, the halfback will have to take on the middle linebacker) The flanker's assignment is to block the strong safety.

SQUARE-OUT

On the "square-out" route, the wide receiver runs straight downfield and then cuts at a ninety degree angle toward the nearest sideline. The sharp angle of the wide receiver's cut on this route makes it difficult for the defenders to prevent a completion.

OFFENSE – WEAK SIDE FORMATION PLAYS

DIVE LEFT

The dive is a short yardage running play aimed through the left of the line of scrimmage at the inside area between the two tackles. It is the simplest type of running play, as the halfback is not lead blocking interference and the offensive linemen execute straight ahead "man blocks".

CUTBACK

This misdirection play demands good fake and lead by the fullback and running finesse by the tailback.

The play looks like a sweep to the right, with the entire offensive line and the fullback moving in that direction. The right guard and tackle will reach toward the right, let their defensive opponents "beat" them, and then wheel the men to the right, out of play. This is called "reach and wheel" blocking. A key move by the left tackle is to let the weak side defensive end go by him and block the weak side linebacker. When the tailback gets the ball, he cuts back against the flow of play and turns the corner on the weak side, past the committed defensive end.

DIVE RIGHT

The dive is a short yardage running play aimed through the right of the line of scrimmage at the inside area between the two tackles. It is the simplest type of running play, as the halfback is not lead blocking interference and the offensive linemen execute straight ahead "man blocks".

At the snap, the right guard, right tackle, and tight end drive block straight ahead to the right to push their opponents off the line. The fullback takes the hand-off and plows forward through the biggest hole. The right side of the offensive line execute cutoff blocks to keep the defense to the weak side, while the center tries to block the middle linebacker so the fullback can break through.

SWEEP RIGHT

The sweep is run to the outside (right), between the tight end and the sideline. On this play, the halfback gets lead blocking help from the fullback and two pulling guards.

Offensive blockers work to clear the outside lane for the sweeping ball carrier. While the flanker slants to block the strong safety, the right guard pulls out and around to block the strong side linebacker and the left guard pulls to block the middle linebacker. The fullback is available to lead block against the strong side cornerback. On this play, the center, the right tackle, and tight end block back toward the weak side.

SCREEN LEFT

The screen pass starts out like a passing play and then turns into a pass behind the line of scrimmage to the halfback. Since a running back receives the ball behind the line and picks up lead blocking, this is really a running play with the pass serving as a long hand-off.

The split end, flanker, and tight end run long pass routes to clear the secondary. The quarterback drops back as if for a long pass while the interior linemen drop back with him. After giving token blocks to the rushing defensive linemen, the left tackle, guard, and center pull out of the pocket and swing left. The halfback stays back as if to block and then moves over behind them. The quarterback shoots a quick pass to the halfback, who moves downfield with his linemen giving blocking protection.

SQUARE-IN

On the "square-in", the wide receiver runs downfield and then cuts toward the center of the field for the pass. The square-in route is a bit dangerous, as it leaves the wide receiver open to be nailed by one or more defensive players.

OFFENSE – STRONG SIDE FORMATION PLAYS

On this inside running play from the Goal Line formation, the tailback takes the hand-off and blasts through the area between the two offensive tackles behind the lead blocking of the fullback.

The right tackle and tight end must drive the strong side defensive end and linebacker off the line, but it is the blocks of the right guard and the fullback against the strong side defensive tackle and the middle linebacker that can really spring the play. The center and left guard co-op block the weak side defensive tackle; then the center must slide off this co-op block to block the pursuing weak side linebacker.

CUTBACK (STRONG SIDE)

This misdirection play demands good fake and lead by the fullback and running finesse by the tailback.

The play looks like a sweep to the right, with the entire offensive line and the fullback moving in that direction. The right guard and tackle will reach toward the right, let their defensive opponents "beat" them, and then wheel the men to the right, out of the play. This is called "reach and wheel" blocking. A key move by the left tackle is to let the weak side defensive end go by him and block the weak side linebacker. When the tailback gets the ball, he cuts back against the flow of play and turns the corner on the weak side, past the committed defensive end.

POST

On the "post" route, the wide receiver runs toward the center of the field in the area of the goal posts. This is a pass route for long yardage, or, hopefully, a touchdown.

FLARE

On the "Flare" route, the running back takes off in a horizontal direction for the nearest sideline. An automatic pass is made to the runningback.

OFFENSE – STRONG SIDE FORMATION PLAYS

OFF TACKLE (STRONG SIDE)

On this off tackle play, the fullback lead blocks for the halfback, who runs through the lane to the outside of the right (strong side) tackle.

This is a simple off tackle play, where both guards block straight ahead rather than pull. At the snap, the right tackle and tight end double-team block the strong side defensive end, while the fullback leads to block the strong side linebacker. The halfback takes the hand-off through the off tackle hole. The flanker tries to provide additional running room by slanting to take on the strong safety.

PITCH LEFT (STRONG SIDE)

On this play, the tailback comes out of a Strong Side formation, takes the pitch-out from the quarterback, and sweeps around the outside behind the leading fullback. The pitch allows the tailback to gain speed and momentum as he tries to turn the corner and get downfield.

The crucial offensive blocks are the hook blocks by the right tackle and tight end against the strong side defensive tackle and end, and the block by the pulling right guard against the strong side linebacker. The left guard pulls and cuts inside to block the middle linebacker. The flanker blocks the strong safety while the lead blocking fullback takes on the strong side cornerback.

OFFENSE – OPEN SET FORMATION PLAYS

LEAD RIGHT

On this play, the tailback comes out of a Open Set formation, takes a hand-off from the quarterback, and sweeps around the outside (to the right) behind the leading fullback. The tailback gains momentum as he tries to turn the corner and get downfield.

The crucial offensive blocks are the hook blocks by the right tackle and tight end against the strong side defensive tackle and end, and the block by the pulling right guard against the strong side linebacker. The flanker blocks the strong safety while the lead blocking fullback takes on the strong side cornerback.

BLAST RIGHT

On this inside running play from the Open Set formation, the tailback takes the hand-off and blasts through the area between the two offensive tackles behind the lead blocking of the fullback.

The right tackle and tight end must drive the strong side defensive end and linebacker off the line, but it is the blocks of the right guard and the fullback against the strong side defensive tackle and the middle linebacker that can really spring the play. The center and left guard co-op block the weak side defensive tackle; then the center must slide off this co-op block to block the pursuing weak side linebacker.

FLAT

The "flat" zone is one of the "underneath" zones protected by the defense on pass plays. There are two flat zones, one on each side of the field, and a flat pass route is a quick to the angular run to either of these two zones.

COMEBACK

A "comeback" route is a pass route that calls for the receiver to run down the field and then turn and run back toward the quarterback. This results in the receiver and the ball coming toward each other head-on, and therefore is a difficult type of route to defend against.

BOMB

The "bomb" pass route is a run straight downfield from the wide receiver positions. This is designed to get the wide receiver free for a long pass.

POST-HOOK

Since the defense knows that the tight end is used as an important blocker on running plays, the tight end often delays his pass route by faking as if to block and then taking off on his route. Sometimes he will even fall to the ground, pretending he has been blocked. These "delay" routes are used to try and fool the defense

FLAT

The "flat" zone is one of the "underneath" zones protected by the defense on pass plays. There are two flat zones, one on each side of the field, and a flat pass route is a quick angular run to either of these two zones.

CROSS AND GO

In the "cross" route, the tight end streaks across the field parallel to the offensive line.

PITCH RIGHT

On this play, the tailback comes out of the Shotgun formation, takes the pitch-out from the quarterback, and sweeps around the outside (to the right) behind the leading fullback. The pitch allows the tailback to gain speed and momentum as he tries to turn the corner and get downfield.

The crucial offensive blocks are the hook blocks by the right tackle and tight end against the strong side defensive tackle and end, and the block by the pulling right guard against the strong side linebacker. The left guard pulls and cuts inside to block the middle linebacker. The flanker blocks the strong safety while the lead blocking fullback takes on the strong side cornerback.

SLANTS

When the defense uses a line stunt, each of the defensive tackles and ends tries to squeeze through the offensive line at an angle, "slanting" to one side – leaving vacated holes for the offensive runningback to run through.

SQUARE GO

On the "square go" play, the wide receiver runs downfield and then cuts toward the center of the field for the pass. The square go route is a bit dangerous, as it leaves the wide receiver open to be nailed by one or more defensive players.

FLAG LEFT

This is called a "flag" route because there used to be flags at the corners of the end zone and the wide receiver would run downfield, aiming their routes at these flags. Often referred to as a "corner route", this is also a long pass route in which the quarterback throws a "bomb".

OFFENSE – KICK FORMATION PLAYS

PUNT

Once the punter receives the snap from the center, he drops the ball and kicks it before it hits the ground. The punter strives for distance and hangtime.

FAKE PUNT

Once the punter receives the snap from the center, he can either run with the ball or pass it to a runningback or receiver.

FIELD GOAL

The try for a field goal is made from the offensive team's line of scrimmage. Placekickers use either a toe kick or a soccer-style kick. The extra point try is made by spotting the ball two yards from the goal line.

FAKE FIELD GOAL

The try for a field goal is made from the offensive team's line of scrimmage. At the snap, the placeholder will pass or run with the ball.

DEFENSE – GOAL LINE FORMATION PLAYS

LINE STUNT

Stunt plays involve last minute switches of assignments between players in order to disorganize the offense. For example, an end and tackle might switch assignments to throw the backs off guard, or a tackle and middle linebacker might switch, with the tackle dropping back while the linebacker moves forward through the "hole" just vacated by the tackle.

DRIVE WALL

All members move to block and gap(s) where they anticipate a run to the side. They all run in that direction forming a "wall".

WALL LEFT

All members move to block any gap(s) where they anticipate a run on the left side. They all run in that direction forming a "wall"

PINCH

The pinch involves a coordinated scheme by all members of the defensive line. On the "pinch", the defensive tackles and ends charge at an angle toward the center of the line. They'll try this stunt when a run up the middle is expected, and hope to throw the offensive linemen off their blocking pattern. The outside gaps are left open where they must be covered by the linebackers.

DEFENSE – GOAL LINE FORMATION PLAYS

WALL RUNNY

All members move to block any gap(s) where they anticipate a run on the right side. They all run in that direction forming a "wall"

DEFENSE – 4-3 FORMATION PLAYS

SHORT ZONE

This is a zone defense that would be used when a short pass is expected. The linebackers cover the zones close to the line of scrimmage while the cornerbacks and safeties cover the remaining zones. Any receiver wandering around these zones will find a defender waiting for him.

4-3 FLANK

The 4-3 defense with more linemen than linebackers, puts more pressure at the line to block against running plays and to pass rush on passing plays.

4-3 BLITZ

The idea of the blitz is to tackle the quarterback on a passing play before he can throw the ball. A blitz is initiated by the linebackers or the secondary (if a safety is involved, it is called a "safety blitz"), it is carried out with the aid of the front linemen, across the line of scrimmage and then blocks him from the side or the back while the runner heads for the space the defensive linemen has vacated.

4-3 PINCH

The pinch involves a coordinated scheme by all members of the defensive line.

On the "pinch", the defensive tackles and ends charge at an angle toward the center of the line. They'll try this stunt when a run up the middle is expected, and hope to throw the offensive linemen off their blocking pattern. The outside gaps are left open where they must be covered by the linebackers.

DEFENSE – 4-3 FORMATION PLAYS

WIDE ZONE

This is a zone defense that would be used when a short, outside (wide) pass is expected. The linebackers cover the short, outside zones while the cornerbacks and safeties cover the remaining outside zones. Any receiver wandering around in these zones will find a defender waiting for him.

DEFENSE – NICKLE FORMATION PLAYS

NICKLE READ

NICKLE BLITZ

NICKLE PINCH

NICKLE DOG

NICKEL PINCH

On the "nickel pinch", the defensive tackles and ends charge at an angle toward the center of the line. They'll try this stunt when a run up the middle is expected, and hope to throw the offensive linemen off their blocking pattern. The outside gaps that are left open with this stunt must be covered by the linebackers.

NICKEL READ

The "nickel read" is used when the offense is expected to pass. All five men in the defensive secondary will be defensive back players (cornerbacks and safeties) to protect against the pass.

NICKEL DOG

This is a dog with two linebackers involved. The inside linebackers rush in along with the nose guard to "plug" up an inside area. The dog is used when the defense anticipates the direction of a running play. The plug is designed to add extra pressure to the area where the run is expected.

NICKEL BLITZ

The two outside linebackers charge at the quarterback at the snap of the ball, in hopes of sacking him or at least pressuring him into a bad pass. This blitz removes one or more linebackers from being able to cover receivers or zones on passing plays.

DEFENSE – NICKLE FORMATION PLAYS

NICKEL ZONE

In a Nickle formation, the Nickle zone would be used when a short pass is expected. The cornerbacks and linebackers "patrol" the zones close to the line of scrimmage while the two safeties cover the deep zones. Any receiver wandering around these zones will find a defender waiting for him.

DEEP NICKEL

This zone defense anticipates a long pass. It reduces the possibility of two receivers coming into the same zone, or "flooding" the zone in the deep area, although the underneath area is left undermanned.

DEFENSE – DIME FORMATION PLAYS

DIME BLITZ

DIME CROSS

PREVENT

PREVENT

The "prevent" play puts six defensive backs in the game. Both the wide receivers can be double-covered. The defense is willing to give up a short pass or run to guard against a bomb. The main goal here is to guard against a long pass.

DIME BLITZ

Same as "nickel blitz" but executed from the dime formation.

DIME WIDE

On this defensive play, the linebacker, who can alternate between being used as a linebacker or a secondary man, is to patrol the "widest" side of the field with the most area from where the ball is spotted to the sideline.

DIME CROSS

On this stunt, two defensive linemen exchange defensive blocking assignments rather than charging straight ahead. Such a move often confuses the offensive linemen if they are expecting the usual straight ahead defensive rush. If used on passing plays, the defensive linemen might have an easier time getting by the offensive pass protection and at the quarterback.

DEFENSE – DIME FORMATION PLAYS

SHORT Z-DIME

From the dime formation, the underneath area is (once again) divided into five zones covered by linebackers and cornerbacks. The two deep zones are covered by the free safety and strong safety. Any receiver trying to pick up a few yards on a quick pass will likely find a defender waiting for him.

DEEP Z-DIME

From the dime formation, the underneath area is (once again) divided into five zones covered by linebackers and cornerbacks. The two deep zones are covered by the free safety and strong safety. Any receiver trying to pick up a long yardage yards on a pass will likely find a defender waiting for him.

DEFENSE – KICK FORMATION PLAYS

PUNT BLOCK

The return team sends eight men to block the punt. Both outside linemen rush as usual, but they are aided by the inside linemen and one rover, who rush at the snap of the ball. The other rover doesn't rush, he stays free to help block for the return man in case the punt gets off.

PUNT RETURN

At the inside of the punt return unit are five players who will either rush forward to block or drop back to form a wall or wedge for the return.

FG BLOCK

The two outside linemen attempt to get in and block the kick with the help of the four trail blazers, who try to attract the blocks of the offensive team's ends and end protectors. The middle man also attacks, with two of the three tall men trying to help open a path for him. The other tall man and the jumper leap as high as possible with their arms up to try and deflect the ball.
